

It is 1955. Jerry Pittman -- a Mormon from Utah -- is drafted into the army. He is a college student but elects not to seek a draft exemption because he has just experienced a tragic experience with his high school sweetheart. He is sent to Camp Gordon, Georgia. There, he meets Georgina Parks, an African-American from nearby Augusta. They fall deeply in love, but values handed down from previous generations make it impossible for them to lead normal lives. Youthful conceit leads them to believe they might overcome the sins of the fathers. The conflict leads to tragedy. Jerry must find his own answer to the age-old generational dilemma of balancing the necessity of conceit against the power of humility.
